

Keeping in touch when you can't be with someone who is so ill that they might die

National Bereavement
Alliance

APCSW
Association of Palliative Care Social Workers

In this difficult time of coronavirus, we are all restricted from getting together with family and friends in the way we would like. This is particularly painful when someone important to us is so seriously ill that they might die, and we can't be physically near them. Even though they are surrounded by people who are caring gently and kindly for them, it can be very hard to be apart from them.

If this is your situation, here are some ways that you and your loved one can feel closer together, even at a distance. These ideas are intended to help whether or not there is a hope that they will recover.

The Invisible String is a children's book that describes the connections between people, even at a distance. If you have children in the family, you might like to have a look at the book. If you like it, you could show it to the children and use it to introduce some of the ideas below, explaining that these are ways of keeping your 'invisible strings' in place.

If your loved one is being cared for in hospital, hospice or a care home, check with the staff caring for them which of the ideas below would work at the moment, and ask them to let you know if this changes.

Phones and tablets

If your loved one is going in to hospital or hospice, try and make sure they take a phone or tablet and charger with them. If their screen is locked with a pin number, think about taking this off, or sharing it with healthcare staff so that they can support them to make a phone or video call.

If children in the family will be speaking by video with the person, remember to prepare the children for what they may look like, particularly if there have been any changes since the last time. Prepare children for what they might see in the room. For example, if there is any medical equipment such as oxygen tubes, you can explain that it is there to help them breathe. If they are very poorly and you do not want children to see them like this, you could consider a phone call instead.

If children are talking on the phone or video call, encourage them to say goodbye at the end of the conversation. This ensures they will always have had the opportunity to do this, just in case they don't have the opportunity to do this again. You don't have to be obvious about this, simply just remind them at the end of the call to "say goodbye now" as they usually would if they were on the telephone.

Recording a message

If you're not sure about what to say on the phone, or the person is too poorly or tired to speak to you, you could record a voice or video message. You could share some special messages about how much you love them and how you are thinking of them. Maybe share some family jokes or memories, or read them a story. Or you could just tell them about your day, what you've been up to, what you had for dinner, who you've spoken to. Children in the family could record individual messages and then a joint one. When you send the message to their phone, they can listen or watch it as often as they want.

Sounds of home

Sometimes it's the little things about home that are comforting: the dog barking, the microwave pinging, children thundering down the stairs. You could make a recording of some of the sounds that are special to your home that will help your loved one feel connected.

Listening to music

If you have a special family song or piece of music, you could ask the person caring for your loved one to play this to them at an agreed time of day. You can listen to it at home at the same time, so you are listening together.

Writing a message

You could send in a letter or card for the person to read, or for someone to read out to them. It could just be a chatty letter, or it could include important things you'd like to say to them. Sometimes it is hard to find the right words, particularly if your relationship with the person has been difficult at times, or if you're not used to talking about how you feel. If you're looking for help to start you off, try completing and saving Julie Stokes' Little Box of Big Thoughts.

If you're writing a short message you could write it in a card, or if you're good at crafts you could try making this origami heart and writing your message inside. Children could draw pictures for the person, and you could make a collage of family photos. Rather than posting things in, you could take photos of them and send them via phone.

Hearts and bracelets

You could cut a heart shape from any material such as an old piece of clothing. The heart could then be attached to your loved one's night clothes to be with them at all times. That way they will still have you close to them. Children could also make friendship bracelets or simple plaits with coloured threads that represent things they love about the person.

Something to hold

You could send something comforting in for your loved one to keep close. It might be a cuddly toy or something that can represent you and your family at home. Or maybe a blanket, jumper or something else that is comforting to touch. Children could give it a cuddle first, and then it could be given to your loved one to keep close to them. You could give it a spray of your favourite aftershave or perfume so that it smells of you. Scents are powerful reminders. You could put scented flowers, dried herbs or leaves in the middle of a circle of fabric to make a little bag. Gather the fabric in and tie it with a ribbon or string: no sewing needed.

Pairs

If you have two of the same thing, you could keep one at home and send one to be with the person. Perhaps two cuddly toys, two pebbles from your garden, two ornaments, or even two mugs with the same design. If one of these is near each of you, it can help you feel connected.

Beyond the door visualisation

This is a simple technique developed by that you can use together with the person caring for your loved one, to help them feel connected to you. Ask the person caring for them to help you with it.

Over the phone, ask your loved one to look towards the door of their room or the curtain of their cubicle. You can say something like 'Beyond that door, not too far away, I am here, thinking about you, sending you all my/our love. Just beyond that door, you should be able to feel it from where you are, you are not alone. I want you to remember that if you feel worried or lonely later, you are not alone.' You may prefer to explain this in your own way. This will help your loved one remember the love and connection in their life even when you are not physically there with them.

The person caring for your loved one can also prompt them by reminding them that 'Beyond that door, everyone you love is thinking about you and sending you love.' Remind the person caring that they can repeat the simple phrase to help your loved one stay connected and close to you. And when you speak to your loved one on the phone, as you end your call, you might like to again remind them 'Don't forget, we are just beyond the door, thinking of you and sending you love.'

Your own ideas

You may have many ideas that are personal and helpful to you and your family at this very difficult time. Although you may not be able to physically be there, you will help them so much by them knowing you are thinking of them and keeping them close to you.

Acknowledgements

With thanks to Ailsa Hill, Alison Meehan, Alison Penny, Di Stubbs, Donna Hastings, Julie Eke, Julie Stokes, and Pam Firth, and to Sinéad McGarry and Kaylene Jackson for the Beyond the Door visualisation.

Childhood Bereavement Network www.childhoodbereavementnetwork.org.uk @cbntweets

National Bereavement Alliance www.nationalbereavementalliance.org.uk @bereavementNBA

23 Mentmore Terrace, London E8 3PN

© National Children's Bureau 2020. The Childhood Bereavement Network is hosted by the National Children's Bureau, registered charity no 258825. A company limited by guarantee.

Childhood
Bereavement
Network

NATIONAL CHILDREN'S BUREAU
Part of the family